

EDUCATION

The causes of poverty are complex, but it is accepted that education is the quickest route out of it. Research shows that investment in education helps poor communities develop much more quickly.

There are currently over 12,000 students at educational institutions we have established in 15 of the worlds poorest countries. From small rural primary schools and madrassas to technical colleges and teacher training, MH educational projects are tackling illiteracy and poverty from all angles.

10 RURAL SCHOOLS BALOCHISTAN

10 rural Community Schools have already been established in Balochistan (Pakistan) - where illiteracy levels are some of the highest in the world. Providing very basic education (one teacher and around 30 children, one or two room schools) is a huge step forward for such rural areas. A further 100 such schools are planned for 2004.
